~Updated Review~

Hector is an episodic adventure game developed by Straandlooper and published by TellTale Games, another company that creates episodic based games. The game is now sold as an all in one package, and is one of the funniest adventure games (could be debated as -the- funniest video game) I've ever played. The humor is dark, witty, and perverse, and doesn't pull any punches with political correctness.

Hector is an overweight, under-worked, highly unqualified detective inspector on a case that has him visiting all parts of Clapper's Wreake, the town that took the "Great" out of Britain. As an adventure game you'll talk to other inhabitants, pick up all sorts of silly items, and find even sillier ways to interact with the environment with the previous two.

Any fan of adventure games would be wise to purchase this. For those unsure of the genre, or not typically one to play these types of games, I'd strongly recommend this purchase as the first choice to break into the genre.. Rude, crude, and totally entertaining. Challenging puzzles with a hilarious story line. A must have for any one who liked Puzzle Agent.. Brilliant adult humour. Gritty, witty and preposterously evil. Not developed by Telltale, but one of their best published works.. Fun and hilarious!. A fun little three-part adventure series with a lot of grim, gritty UK humour and some cynical worldbuilding. This game won't give you an inner glow, but it's unlikely you've ever played anything quite like it before. In the very least it is a valuable historical document that documents the 'chav' for the ages.. The devs manage to fuse British humor quite well with adventure gameplay. While the plot is nothing special, the characters provide hilarious and witty lines as you take the role of Hector, a drunk and sometimes perverted detective who is called to help negotiate a hostage situation.

The puzzles were straight forward for the most part, but some objects that you needed to grab blend in well with the static environment so you'll need to hover your mouse around at times to make sure you didnt miss anything. It isn't that bad. Hector or another character will provide comedic relief while you look around.

This is an episodic game, so expect 2 - 3 hours of gameplay, depending wheter or not you use puzzle hints.

No complaints on my end, other than tedious backtracking which might seem slow since you have to wait for Hector to walk across the screen. Would have liked a fast navigation if you double/triple clicked a path to speed things up a bit.

Definitely worth playing the game though!

My review which is longer than this box allows can be found here: <http://greyreviews.livejournal.com/30047.html>
.Point and click absurdity.. Perfect in every aspect.. absolutely hilarious main character and jokes. gameplay was quite intuitive but I mainly went through most dialogues just for the comedy. great stuff. :). DO NOT BUY. This game is juvenile in the worst possible way. and I'm pretty sure the only reason it gets praised as much as it does is because Americans are conditioned to think that anything a dude with an accent says is automatically "clever". I've heard it described as "edgy" but it's only "edgy" in the same way that Family Guy is - which is to say it makes vulgar jokes at the expense of safe targets. titillating youngsters in a completely homogenized. safe way.

And the puzzles are neither novel nor particularly difficult, so what's the point?. I just came off playing "Paradigm", i saw this game with high reviews and thought i would check it out. The controls are awful. just needlessly complex. Why double click everything? why not right click. and then give me the options. If you like gross out humor. you might like this. i guess it's what the aim is. I'm not even sure. next part is a tiny spoiler.

The first puzzle is fishing a paper out of a toilet. but you dont want to use your hands because its dirty. so you use a used condom? like that's somehow less dirty? oh. you also need to make the condom in a net. by finding a severed foot in a shoe. located in a vent. lol so random. bad game. dumb puzzles.. 3 Episodes are trucking AMAZING. Super funny\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665

Best Point and Click ever!
