The present study was conducted to optimize the level of the microcrystalline cellulose fraction (MFC) in the formulation of an orodispersible tablet of indomethacin using a polymer carrier as well as a process parameter, i.e. blend time, to facilitate a significant release of the drug. Increasing the MFC content from 10 to 30% w/w increased the friability of the tablet and reduced its hardness, but at the same time a lower amount of water was required for wet granulation and the drug was more soluble in the MFC fraction. A tablet prepared with 15% MFC reached a similarity factor of 90 between the in vitro dissolution profile and that of the reference preparation of indomethacin. Furthermore, the acetylation of MFC improved the physicochemical properties of the tablet, but as the FT-IR spectra showed, the rate of drug release from the tablets also depended on the amount of carrier. The MFC fraction also showed proper compressibility and lubrication properties, facilitating the ejection of the tablet from the die and showed a slower drug release compared to microcrystalline cellulose. The present study suggests that MFC is a useful vehicle for orodispersible tableting. Partial purification and characterization of collagenase from cultured rabbit bone cells. Although it is accepted that most osteoclasts are derived from a mononuclear population of macrophage/monocyte-derived osteoclast precursor cells, bone-resorbing cells can be isolated from clonal cultures of fetal osteoblastic cells. We have characterized and partially purified these cells and their associated collagenolytic activity. Primary mixed fetal osteoblast-fibroblast clonal cell cultures from embryonic day 22 fetal rabbits were characterized in terms of cell morphology and collagenase content (by biochemical, immunological and histochemical techniques) as well as in vitro bone resorption (by an in vitro organ culture technique). The collagenase activity was partially purified by sequential ammonium sulfate precipitation and Sepharose 4B-CL-6 chromatography. The rate of collagen breakdown by fetal osteoblastic cells increased with time of seeding and was paralleled by an increase in the level of collagenase detected by immunoreactivity to both anti

Are all these drivers installed on my computer? If not, what is the difference between the two? I assume the drivers for the printer is different than the PC hardware drivers. I have both of them in a CD-ROM, but I don't think that's the reason. A: As far as I understand there are two different things: - Software drivers (for printers and scanners) are installed, their purpose is to use the hardware on the computer. They're not intended to be used in the same way as the OS drivers (for your computer, display, Ethernet, WiFi card, etc.) - OS drivers are software that are installed to match the hardware that is in your computer. It seems like you only have the CD-Rom driver for the printer? There's a chance that you have all the drivers installed, but the OS can't see them. This can be the case if the printer is an unsupported or invalid model that is not detected by the OS.
